June 2023 - Message from Your CAMA President

The Advantages of being an ACTIVE CAMA member:

Firstly, I would like everyone to join us in welcoming the following new CAMA members that have joined us since the beginning of 2023:

Best Vending Services	Ottawa	Jerry Best and their team
The Vend Group Inc.	Hamilton	John McMullan and their team
SmartVend Toronto	Toronto	Sonny Day and their team
Servomax Inc.	Montreal	Simon Ghilarducci, Arie Koifman and their team
Simplymade4u Corp.	Cambridge	Rishav Khurana and their team

You may ask what the difference is between being a member and an active member. Both are entitled to access all the programs and benefits of membership, but there are many more important opportunities to be had by being an active member. By active I am talking about attending the trade shows hosted by CAMA and NAMA as well as events like our annual golf tournament. I recently returned from attending NAMA in Atlanta. I attend these events to nurture relationships with suppliers and other operator members in our association. We host the Canada Night Reception at this event, and it was once again well attended by suppliers and Canadian operators. What a great opportunity to bond with your peers in our industry. Many of you may not realize the benefits of exposing yourself and your company to the association members, but I can assure you that you will be rewarded many times over. It is seldom that I come back from a trade show without securing a program that will either provide benefits to our business, grow our business, or save us money in procurement. We all strive for operational efficiencies and growth, and participating in live events is the best way to promote your business and access the benefits created by building relationships with suppliers and other operators.

As I write this, I am preparing to board a plane and head off to Toronto to attend CAMA's annual golf tournament. This is another great event and a way to mingle with our association members in a casual and fun environment. Great people, great food, and the possibility of some great golf. The golf is just the reason to gather, have a good time and build relationships.

Next up is our CAMA trade show in Whistler this September 19th to 21st. This is being advertised as our first UnconVENDtional Event. This will be an action-packed event with a great list of guest speakers headlined by Jeff Mowat. It promises to be a great event in the beautiful setting of Whistler BC at a great discounted price for accommodations. This will be an event that you should not be missing out on.

As a single operator you will continue to battle alone, as a member of CAMA you become part of an army and you will have the support to conquer.

Jim Jackson,

CAMA President

Tech Corner: The Importance of Technicians: Repair, Replace, Replenish

It should go without saying that as operators in the unattended retail industry, our business is dependent on the functionality of our equipment. For vending machines and coffee equipment, any down time is lost opportunity and a ticking time bomb until a customer lodges a complaint.

Unfortunately, broken equipment is inevitable, but there are steps to ensure that the down time is minimized. Technicians should aim to repair machine issues within their first visit, by planning ahead and stocking commonly used parts in their vehicles. Identify what these parts are and make a checklist to ensure the correct quantities are available – parts inventory should be checked regularly and replenished as soon as they are used up. Damaged or defective parts should be thrown out or clearly labeled pending repair so that they don't get recirculated in the parts inventory.

Having well trained technicians is crucial to repairing your equipment in a timely manner. The common challenge is that there aren't many formalized training courses readily available on the market – hence, a lot of technicians are 'trained on-the-job' with trial and error causing the ramp up period to increase significantly. Operators can leverage machine manufacturer's training sessions and NAMA's Knowledge Center as a starting point for their technicians to understand the basics and fundamentals of the equipment. As machines become more digital base, technicians will need to adapt to the ever-evolving technology.

Note: CAMA members get access to the NAMA Knowledge Centre at NAMA member prices. For more information on the online courses available go to <https://www.vending-cama.com/membership/membership-benefits/professional-training>

Issue 15 - June, 2023 - Bank of Canada

Update from the Bank of Canada

As you may have heard, the Government of Canada announced on May 6th that a portrait of the reigning monarch will continue to feature on Canada's $20 bank note.

With the Government's announcement of King Charles III as portrait subject, the Bank of Canada will start the design process for the new $20 .

We will be researching new visual content to complement the portrait. In line with our principles of bank note design, we will consult Canadians on the matter. The Bank will also begin consultations with relevant subject matter experts, organizations, stakeholders and government departments on theme, subject matter and images.

Apart from the portrait of King Charles, we know the note will be vertical, green in colour, and be printed on polymer.

The current Frontiers Series $20 note was issued in 2012, so the timing is right.

From this point onward, our focus is on creating a new, secure and meaningful $20 note for Canadians, officially pausing efforts on the $5 note.

The new $20 is expected to be issued a few years from now so the current $20 note will continue to circulate for years to come.

Coffee Corner: A New Office Coffee

Experience

Having a café office coffee program offering fresh milk and espresso-based beverages is the new hype, but is it here to stay? YES. There's no going back from fresh milk!

In a post-covid world, employers are looking at ways to entice and increase their experience in the office. One of the most cost-effective programs is bringing a café experience to the office kitchen. This aligns with the market trend of moving away from K-Cups and traditional drip coffee machines.

Here are some reasons why:

Quality and taste: Freshly brewed espresso-based beverages made with real coffee and fresh milk deliver a superior taste and quality compared to drip coffee or pre-packaged options. Employees can enjoy a rich and flavorful coffee experience, which can boost morale and satisfaction in the workplace. Moreover, fresh milk is often considered a healthier choice compared to non-dairy creamers or artificial alternatives commonly found in K-Cups.

Customization options: a café office coffee program typically offers a wider variety of espresso-based beverages like cappuccinos, lattes, macchiatos, and much more. With access to fresh milk, employees can customize their drinks according to their preferences, such as adjusting the milk-to-coffee ratio or adding flavored syrups. This customization option can enhance the overall coffee experience and cater to diverse tastes. This keeps employees in the office instead of leaving for their 'Vanilla Latte'.

Sustainable and eco-friendly: K-Cups have faced criticism due to their negative impact on the environment. These single-use pods contribute to plastic waste, as most of them are not recyclable. On the other hand, an espresso-based coffee program with fresh milk promotes sustainability by reducing the use of disposable cups and minimizing waste generated by individual coffee servings.

Market demand and preferences: The coffee market has been shifting away from single-use pods like K-Cups. Consumers are increasingly valuing freshness, quality, and sustainability. That's why partnering with the right equipment and roaster is essential to the success of the program. As we are more conscience as to what we feed our bodies. Using a coffee that is ethically sourced, specialty coffee and small batch roasted is essential to finishing the experience in a cup of excellence.

Employee satisfaction and productivity: High-quality coffee programs can have a positive impact on employee satisfaction and productivity. Offering fresh milk and authentic espresso-based beverages creates a pleasant and comfortable work environment, promoting employee well-being and engagement. Moreover, taking breaks for coffee can serve as a social activity that encourages collaboration and fosters a positive workplace culture.

In summary, incorporating an authentic bean to cup coffee program with fresh milk for espresso-based beverages in offices aligns with the market's shift away from K-Cups. Bringing together specialty coffee with café quality equipment brings results for all stakeholders.

4 Tips to Protect Young Workers — And Your Business — This Summer

Want to keep your business booming over the summer months? Don't skimp on safety orientation and training for the new and young workers you hire, says Ayden Robertson, Senior Consultant, WSPS. "It will help protect this particularly vulnerable group from workplace incidents and also support a thriving business."

A recent study found that workplaces without adequate safety programs and effective orientation and training in place are more likely to experience higher injury rates. ^[1]

New and young workers are three times more likely to experience an injury in their first month on the job. While they make up only 13% of the workforce, young workers account for about 16% of WSIB lost-time injury claims. ^[2]

What makes new and young workers more vulnerable? “They may have little to no experience with health and safety. They may be unaware of their rights and responsibilities. There may be gaps in understanding of the language in which safety information is provided. They may also be eager to impress, lack the confidence to speak up, or even irrationally believe they are immune to harm,” explains Ayden.

What can you do to set your new and young workers, and your business, up for success this summer? Read Ayden’s tips below.

4 tips for keeping young workers safe

1. Know the risks new and young workers face. “Every job comes with risks of varying degrees. As the employer, you need to understand what the risks are before you can implement controls, develop and train workers.”
2. Make sure your health and safety policies and procedures are in place and up to date. “Regardless of the size of an organization, it’s critical to put pen to paper and document how jobs are to be done safely. Formalizing how the work is to be performed with clear safety considerations provides a consistent approach to a task to which workers can be held accountable.”
3. Don’t rush training. Yes, you want to get people up to speed quickly, but “it’s not enough to just give new or young workers policies to read, sign off, and then start a job.” Everyone learns differently and it is critical to provide and reinforce important safety information in various ways. Consider a mix of theory and practical training that:
 - includes mandatory health and safety awareness training on workers’ rights and responsibilities under the Occupational Health and Safety Act.
 - encourages your new and young workers to bring forward health and safety concerns. “There are always conscious and unconscious pressures to perform in the workplace, and new and young workers are typically eager to impress,” says Ayden. “As a result, they may not even mention hazards or near-misses they experience. Share examples of past health and safety improvements in the workplace to reinforce that worker input is valued and actioned.”
 - utilizes a variety of teaching methods. “Training should progress beyond the classroom to the work site. “Put theory into practice with hands-on instruction on how to perform tasks safely. Ayden recommends using the “I tell you and show you; you tell me and show me” approach.
 - allows young workers to develop skills safely before working independently. Job shadowing is a great idea, says Ayden. “Consider pairing new and young workers with experienced workers as part of the training process to provide coaching and reinforce safe work practices.”
 - emphasizes accountability for not following safety procedures. “New and young workers want to impress and may take unnecessary risks. It's important to emphasize that workers are expected to follow safe work procedures and that supervisors will actively ensure they do," says Ayden.

1. Be sure your supervisors are trained and “competent” under the Act. “A supervisor by any other name – coordinator, lead hand, captain, or ‘supreme chancellor’ – is still a supervisor if they have charge of a workplace or authority over workers.”
