June 2025 - Message from Your CAMA President

Looking Ahead

As we enjoy the summer months, I want to take a moment to thank each of you for being part of our growing CAMA community. Whether you've been a long-time member or just joined us recently, your support helps strengthen and shape the future of our industry.

We recently hosted our annual CAMA Golf Tournament, a strong turnout once again and an example of how CAMA continues to bring the industry together. Beyond being a great day of networking and visibility for sponsors, these events reinforce the professional connections that help move our businesses forward.

Looking ahead to the fall, we are continuing that momentum with more Network Nights and planning for our Annual General Meeting (AGM). We will be returning to Montreal for another social evening, and looking at expanding to Toronto and Calgary, following the positive feedback from our Vancouver and Montreal events.

We are also focused on building out the value of your membership. From group insurance and health benefits to discounts through Perkopolis and growing advertising opportunities in our bi-monthly newsletter, there are more ways than ever to make your membership work for your business. If you haven't yet explored these options, I encourage you to visit our Member Benefits page at www.vending-cama.com.

The year has been full of positive signs for our industry, with strong reports from operators and growing interest in vending, micro markets, and office coffee services across Canada. CAMA also continues to monitor the impact and future of supply chains, tariffs and other issues so that we can best support you.

Issue 27 - June, 2025

On behalf of the CAMA Board of Directors, I wish you a relaxing and productive summer season.

A Beautiful Day for Golf

It has been a rocky start to the year between Canada and the US and as a result there is a heightened awareness both from consumers and businesses on where they choose to spend their dollars and what companies they support. This comes down to saving costs (avoiding tariffs) and/or about Canadian pride and supporting Canadian companies. While there is a push towards "buying Canadian," it's important to recognize that doesn't only mean supporting Canadian owned brands. Many American companies have built significant operations in Canada which means they are employing local workers, sourcing Canadian ingredients, and ultimately investing in our communities and economy. They too can still make the claim for "Made in Canada" meaning you have greater selection, innovation, and solutions right here at home. We look forward to seeing more members in 2025 as the tournament continues to grow!

Companies such as Frito-Lay, Coca-Cola, and Hershey are great examples. All have US-based headquarters, however, they have invested globally and in Canadian manufacturing and supply chains. When we buy their products which are made in Canada, it also means we are supporting everything from local farmers and packaging suppliers to truck drivers, maintenance teams, and more. The economic ripple effect extends beyond just what's on the shelf. For towns built around major manufacturing plants, these facilities are often major employers and steady contributors to the local economy.

For operators, this is a smart way to navigate the current climate. Sourcing from companies that manufacture locally helps avoid unnecessary tariff costs and cross-border delays, while still offering familiar, in-demand brands. It's not about where the head office is located – but where the jobs are, where the goods are made, and who's putting investment back into the country.

The tariffs have posed economic challenges on Canadians while also challenging us to reflect on our nation's sovereignty, identity, and what we can all do to support our local communities and fellow countrymen at large. While it may not be easy, we believe that the best any of us can do during these times is to stay well-informed and remember that if you have any questions or concerns your CPS Vending Account Manager is available to support you.

Your voice matters.

CAMA is launching this short, targeted survey to better understand how the industry is experiencing the impact of trade tariffs and related policies. Whether your business has already been directly affected or you are just starting to hear concerns, your input will help paint a clearer picture of what's happening across our sector.

Why Now?

Global trade tensions have been escalating in recent months, with discussions of retaliatory tariffs, changes in import/export rules, and uncertainty in key international partnerships. These developments have the potential to affect everything from the cost of goods and equipment to customer buying patterns and long-term business planning.

But every business experiences these changes differently. Some may already be grappling with higher costs, while others are hearing from customers who are cautious about spending. By gathering input from a broad cross-section of our membership and industry, we aim to identify and understand which issues require attention from CAMA.

Why This Survey Matters

As your professional association, our role is to represent and advocate for your interests - whether through government relations, industry partnerships, or new tools and resources. To do this effectively, we need data.

The insights we gather will help us:

- Identify key pressure points within the industry
- Inform advocacy positions in upcoming discussions with policymakers and trade representatives

- Communicate the real-world effects of trade policies on Canadian businesses to the public and media

Coffee Corner: Product of Canada?

What to Expect

Made in Canada? “Proudly

The survey takes less than 10 minutes to complete. We are asking about your direct experiences with tariffs, what you are hearing from customers or suppliers, and what kind of action or support you would like to see from CAMA in the months ahead.

Over the years all of us involved in the Office Coffee Industry, and indeed the coffee industry as a whole, have witnessed the significant evolution of coffee trends; cold brew, instant, flavoured, espresso based, sustainability, craft roasted and who can forget “Bullet Coffee” more accurately referred to as “Butter Coffee”, (yes, it was and is a thing).

When we understand the scope and scale of challenges across our membership and our industry, we are in a far better position to advocate for meaningful change and offer the right kinds of support.

A quick GOOGLE search of “Made in Canada” will return thousands of definitions and facts. The most notable being the difference between “Made in Canada” and “Product of Canada”, not to mention “Assembled in Canada” or in the case of coffee, “Roasted and Blended in Canada.” Interestingly enough, there is no mention of “Butter added in Canada”.

Take the Survey Now

Suffice to say, we have all certainly become experts on the Canadian Food Inspection Agency and all their definitions.

So, is “Made in Canada” just another coffee trend? Is it a business trend, a business model or perhaps an actual lifestyle choice and more importantly is it here to stay? Does buying “Made in Canada” products actually matter? Do our clients really care, or do they just want the best price?

Although our customers always want the best price, “Made in Canada” is here to stay, and that is a good thing. It goes without saying, “Made in Canada” will make a significant difference to our economy. It will result in more Canadian jobs, and better products, as a result of stricter industry regulations. There is even a very strong argument to be made that “Made in Canada” may even contribute to improving our carbon footprint, once again, a result of tougher Canadian regulations.

At the recent CAMA show in Toronto, by my count, although, certainly not official, the most common question asked was “Are your products made in Canada?”

In discussions with other vendors, we all agreed, “Made in Canada” was the unofficial theme of this year’s CAMA show. It was even suggested that the increase in attendance was due to the fact that many operators were out searching for “Made in Canada” products and demonstrate their elbows were indeed “up”. In fact, consumer surveys show that a large percentage of consumers actively try to purchase made in Canada products. One survey suggests that 37% of Canadians are in products labelled “Made in Canada” and 23% look for “Product of Canada”, this would clearly indicate that some 60% of Canadians are putting an emphasis on products that have a direct Canadian connection either by being made in Canada or by products that have a direct Canadian connection. Right now, get 100% financing with no payments for 90 days (WAO) and boost your revenue without affecting your cash flow.

Health and safety at a distance: how to keep safe

As a WSPS Consultant, Troy Nel spends much of his time travelling to remote locations by car to assist thousands of Canadians who work alone, some or all the time, without direct supervision on construction services and products to homes or businesses, work alone after hours, work at home, or travel.

These workers face all sorts of hazards, some of them high risk. It's your legal duty to protect your employees, but how do you manage it all from a distance? Troy has several tips to help you keep your workers safe.

The First Step

It all starts with a hazard assessment.

Understand the laws and standards that apply to the work your employee will be doing. Is working alone a high-risk circumstance?

Identify and assess the hazards a lone worker may face with help from the worker, others who have experience, or a health and safety committee. In addition to hazards related to equipment and processes, assess the worker at higher risk, such as accidents, illness, fire or other emergencies, driving and weather-related hazards, and risk of violence.

Consider whether new, young or female employees face a higher risk.

Determine if the worker is suitable for the job. "Working alone can be very challenging," says Troy. "Consider the worker from a psychological health and safety perspective." The worker should also be medically fit to work alone.

Your hazard assessment will determine whether risks are too high or can be controlled, and what control measures to put in place.

Essential Control Measures

These three control measures could make a difference between working safely and working alone.

- Ensure regular communication between the supervisor and worker. This is critical. Have predetermined times set by the employer - more frequently if there are high risks, says the supervisor can remind the worker about hazards to watch for and provide guidance in emergencies. Cell phones are a must, and if a cell phone won't work at the lone worker location, have other means of communication, such as a satellite phone or radio. Additionally, encourage workers to have functions on their cell phone that allow a person to view allergy information and call an ambulance without unlocking the phone.
- Training. To minimize hazards, lone workers need the proper knowledge, skills and equipment. Provide safe work practices, communication and emergency procedures. Depending on the risk, training in violence and harassment, defensive driving and vehicle inspection, identifying and marking hazards, and assessment calls for personal protective equipment, provide it, along with training in its use. The worker should also feel empowered to pause or reschedule a service if they determine it is not safe.
- Emergencies. Equip lone workers with emergency contact numbers and locations, as well as first aid and roadside kits. Include a paper copy of the numbers in case cell phone service is interrupted. Have a landline or even a pay phone.

Use automatic warning devices to alert you if the worker is in trouble or unconscious. If the risk is high, have a code word the lone worker can use to let you know. For remote workers, check weather reports and road conditions and to ensure the worker takes clothing that has the proper degree of insulation for the weather. A GPS can guide you to a remote worker who is missing, lost or stranded.
